MEET THE TEAM: LABOUR POOL COORDINATOR

Tunaalaaq Adams
Labour Pool
Coordinator

Tunaalaaq is based in her hometown of Rankin Inlet, where she lives with her 4 year old daughter. She graduated from Nunavut Arctic College in Rankin Inlet with a diploma in Management Studies. Before joining Agnico she worked for Calm Air as a lead customer service agent.

Tunaalaaq enjoys spending time with her daughter, being outdoors and fishing. She is also very passionate about youth, encouraging them to pursue education and supporting them to enter the mining industry.

Tunaalaaq has been working for Agnico Eagle for the better part of 2 years. Every day Tunaalaaq helps Kivalliq Inuit achieve their goals of attaining employment with Agnico Eagle or one of its contractors. Agnico values all of her hard work!

LABOUR POOL BENEFITS AND HOW TO ACCESS

The Labour Pool process is made up of 5 steps – in completing these steps, applicants will better prepare themselves for the labour market as well as for a potential job opportunity with Agnico Eagle or one of our contractors.

The objective of the Nunavut Labour Pool is to increase Inuit manpower in all of Agnico Eagle's Nunavut operations by contributing to the development of skills and competencies of the Inuit population in the Kivalliq region.

Click here for more information on the steps of the Labour Pool. If you would like to access the Labour Pool, please contact the Labour Pool Coordinator!

Should you have any questions about the Labour Pool or would like to access it, you can reach Tunaalaaq at:

Improving Health and Safety Standards: Fire Management

Did you know that every person working at a mine site must be trained in the use of firefighting equipment such as the use of fire extinguishers? It is a requirement of the Nunavut Mine Health and Safety Act and Regulations.

Under the Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) Regulations all employers in Nunavut also have a duty to train employees on the correct procedures to follow in the event of a fire.

Training in fire management procedure is an essential part of a health and safety program. Are you interested in building, updating or improving your business's fire procedure training? Go to www.aemnunavut.ca for examples, resources and information:

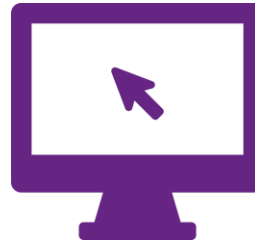

How does Agnico Eagle provide fire management training? All employees complete an online 'e-learning' course.

Interested to see Agnico Eagle's training materials? Fill out the form on our website to receive a temporary license.
